Island Energy (RIE) is transitioning to a new data tracking and reporting platform, so the savings are currently estimates.

During the discussion, it was stated that most new building developers use electric ranges. Council Member Teichert spoke about structuring incentives to help facilitate any systems to transition to electric in the future. Chair Oakley asked about the timing of spending and why so much remains for the last quarter. Commissioner Kearns said historically it's always been this way with the "hockey stick" effect in programming and reporting. Council Member Feldman asked for suggestions on how to avoid this, and Council Member Teichert spoke of using the alternative market potential study to address these matters. Council Member Gill Case asked to see absolute numbers rather than percentages in the future.

b. Rhode Island Energy Update on Equity Metrics and Tracking

Mr. Makuch with Rhode Island Energy presented on the seven equity metrics and described the process of developing the metrics. Chair Oakley asked if these graphs show if we are on track and how they compare to previous years. Mr. Dagher explained that this presentation provides a baseline to build on in future iterations, so comparisons to previous years are limited. Chair Oakley would like the data presented to show places where the Council can improve and better collaborate with RI Energy. The presentation showed that knob and tube wiring is the most frequent pre-weatherization barrier in the state and Council Member Garlick suggested sorting the barriers by census tract for additional granularity.

c. Energy Efficiency Docket 23-39-EE Regulatory Updates

Mr. Johnson shared that there was a PUC meeting this morning and noted that the PUC did reject the gas demand response pilot program at this time. Mr. Johnson also reviewed the completed items and upcoming items for the energy efficiency docket proceedings, such as Council Member Teichert's testimony.
